

Contents

Introduction

Wage-labour and value

A Note on the method

On the (re)construction of the world

The ideological apparatuses

Creativity is life

We can trust the feeling

Life is living

The world of phenomena

Sameness

Being well

Seeing it all

The quest for truth

What is noise?

Deliberative reality

To look for the good society

Control and discipline

Phenomena

A London tale

To change the world

Positivism and the whole

Durkheim and Althusser

Reading Althusser

Spark of mind

Experience and life

Pure forms

The sun

We live life

The real

The world

Critical objectivity

The real thing

All

The real

References

On the (re)construction of the world

We can make new societies starting with man. We need to integrate them with feelings. We need forms of the will, i.e., an ethics regulating the relation between people (Durkheim 1960). We need a legitimating reason. Using our selves, man we understand that the meaning of it all, of meaning is life and thus we should create a good society and a good world. This is what we have got our reason, our ability to think for (Kant 1788). Measuring against existing etc societies we understand that there is much improvement to be done in the society and the world. We understand that we are social beings, living together and that we must improve ourselves, as individuals by using society: man together (Hegel 1899). This: the improvement of man, creating the good society and the good life is the meaning of everything, at least the meaning of man. We exist because we shall learn to do good, become good and create a good world.